Directions: Read the following passage and answer the questions by choosing the best choice (1), (2), (3), or (4). Then mark the correct choice on your answer sheet.

Passage 1:

Before television and computers, our most powerful communication tool was language. However, the supremacy of language has been challenged by the introduction of images –powerful, realistic, moving images – into our everyday communication. The advent of television and computing in the twentieth century marked a new period in communication technology, the Information Age. The marriage of words and images offered by television together with the interactive power of the computer, have profoundly affected the nature of our society.

In its short life of half a century, the computer has revolutionized the way we communicate. In the workplace, businesses rely on computers for communication and for performing routine tasks such as record keeping, accounting, and inventory. Computing has spawned new forms of media, such as the worldwide network of millions of computers called the Internet. By the mid-1990s, the general public was using the Internet for education, entertainment, and business, making it the fastest-growing medium today.

- 2) language is still the most powerful communication tool
- 3) the general public are dissatisfied with new forms of media
- 4) computerization in the workplace has both advantages and disadvantages

Passage 2

The story of communication is an important part of world history. In prehistoric times, for example, people did not have books. They did not know much about geography. People were limited in many ways. They knew only about themselves and their environment. Their knowledge of geographical things like mountains and rivers was limited. They did not travel very far. Sometimes they knew about nearby people and communicated with them. They sent messages in simple ways. Early types of signals for communication included smoke from fires and the sounds of drums.

Then people formed towns, and then cities, as safe places to live. Soon they began to develop other ways to communicate, to spread information. People began to buy and sell things to one another. Because of their businesses, they developed writing system to keep records and to send messages. Life was changing for many people. Business caused changes, and so did the invention of the printing press. Many people learned to read then.

Suddenly communication and knowledge improved greatly. People sent letters and news by horse and carriage. Later the mail went by train, by boat, and then by airplane. World communication became a possibility.

Passage 3

Less than three years ago, doom merchants were predicting that the growth in video games and the rise of the Internet would sound the death knell for children's literature. But contrary to popular myth, children are reading more books than ever. A recent survey by Books Marketing found that children up to the age of 11 read on average for four hours a week, particularly girls.

Moreover, the children's book market, which traditionally was seen as a poor cousin to the more lucrative adult market, has come into its own. Publishing houses are now making considerable profits on the back of new children's books and children's authors can now command significant advances. "Children's books are going through an incredibly fertile period," says Wendy Cooling, a children's literature consultant. "There's a real buzz around them. Book clubs are happening, sales are good, and people are much more willing to listen to children's authors."

The main growth area has been the market for eight to fourteen-year-olds, and there is little doubt that the boom has been fuelled by the bespectacled apprentice, Harry Potter. So influential has J.K. Rowling's series of books been that they have helped to make reading fashionable for pre-teens. 'Harry made it OK to be seen on a bus reading a book,' says Cooling. 'To a child, that is important.' The current buzz around the publication of the fourth Harry Potter beats anything in the world of adult literature.

- 26- What is the main idea of the passage?
 1) Children don't read nowadays.
 2) Publishers has lost confidence and wanted to make books like movies.
 3) Despite the growth of video games, children are still interested in books.
 4) Other forms of entertainment are competing with books for children's attention.
- 27- According to the passage, Books Marketing ----- .
 1) is a successful publishing house in the children's book market
 2) has recently announced that children's books are here to stay
 3) compared children's books with adults' books in a recent survey
 4) has conducted research into young children's interest in books
- 28- The word "lucrative" in line 6 cold best be replaced by ----- .
 1) critical 2) creative 3) specialized 4) successful
- 29- According to the passage, children ----- .
 1) are not interested in topics relevant to adult life
 2) as young as eight show interest in reading books
 3) are more interested in television and computers than books
 4) do not like to be seen reading a book in a public place
- 30- Why did the author mention Harry Potter in the last paragraph?
 1) To give an example of a best seller
 2) To encourage the reader to read Rowling 's series of books
 3) To emphasize that Rowling's books have contributed to the success of the children's book market
 4) To compare children's literature with adult literature
